Mr. Buchanan denies that he ever said to Douglas that he would cut off the head of every friend he had in office, if he did not support the Lecompton husiness. His memory is very indifferent, and his statement of little consequence. It was not statement of little consequence. It was not Mr. Buchanan denies that he ever statement of little consequence. It was not exhorted his brethren and sisters, and afect in his nature to address such threatening the expiration of a devout prayer, took language to any gentleman, he says. We don't see the difference between deing it and threatening to do it. That he has done it, and is still engaged in it daily, the parties that the proceed large, a coupte of boys seized min, the proceedings, a coupte of boys seized min, the proceedings are coupted by the proceedings are coupted by the proceedings are coupted by the proceedings are considered by the proceeding by the procedure by the proceeding by the proceeding by the procedure by the proceeding by the procedure by t are all aware. that the holder of every prominent and valuable office, who was a Douglas man, has been removed, without going into details with precision; and if, indeed, there were there and there one left, the third would be bere and there one left, the third would be virtnally executed. The President would set, not threaten. Well, we are of opinion that the dead is unite as dispersion and the dead is unite as dispersion and the dead is unite as dispersion to the present on the occasion that the deed is quite as disgusting as the threat, and since he is guilty of the toriner, we have no doubt he made the latter.

That the President had no conversation That the l'resident had no conversation with Houglas, after his annual message, is quite probable. Should he he elected President, his Congressional career will have covered exactly eighteen years, fourteeu of which will belong to his Senatorial history. It is seldom that the life of any man presents so unch of success, in so short a time, as we find in the twenty-six years that have passed away since his majority was completed. As a general thing his success han to been undeserved; if we look only at the intellectual side of things, Mr. Douglas probably has no intellectual superior among the statesmen and politicians of the United States. His speeches and writings are strong, clear, precise and logical. He has participated in all the great Congressional debates of the last seventeen years, not to speak of his enormous labors "on the sump," and in conventions and eaucuses. Rarely has it been his lot to be beaten. He was more than a match for Mr. Webster in 18594, when that illustrious man endeavored to show that the Democracy were responsible for the pro-shavery character of the Government.
